WARNER, Mr. FRANCIS, M.D., F.R.C.P., Physician to the London Hospital:

1. Abstract of evidence.

Connexion with previous inquiries into feeble-minded and epileptic children, 665-77.
Committee of inquiry, 1888-96, history of its formation, 669-70, 717; history of the inquiry into 100,000 children, 718-9, 941-5; method of the inquiry, children not handled, but observation made of defects of development, nerve, and nutrition, and teachers accounts accepted as to dulness, 720-6, 786-92, 946-50, 989-91.
Classification of defects: (1) developmental defects (2) nerve defects, (3) defects of nutrition (delicacy) (4) defect of mental power (dulness), 679-81.
Frequent association of defects in one child, and variation of such association according to sex, residence, age, environment, 694-704, 793-5; developmental defects in girls more frequently associated with delicacy than in boys, 699, 793; children showing developmental defects more likely to show other defects also if attending day schools than if living at residential schools, 794; children under 10 years of age have more tendency to delicacy, if otherwise defective, than children over 10 years of age.
Signs; enumeration of signs: (1) of developmental defect, (2) of nerve defect, 727-9; how signs were originally selected, 730; each sign may be found separately in normal children, 730, and is not necessarily indicative of mental feebleness, 951-3; signs removable by training, 729.
Classification of defective children, in 16 primary groups, according to the combinations of the four classes of defect, 685-95; children requiring special care and treatment divided into six groups: (1) idiots and imbeciles, (2) feebly gifted mentally, (3) mentally exceptional, (4) epileptic, (5) physically defective, (6) children reported dull, and also presenting one or more signs of defects of development, nerve, and nutrition, 732-4; definitions of these terms, and explanation as to the principles determining classification of doubtful cases, 734-70.
Number of defective children, as defined above, numbered 951 out of 86,378, or 1.1 per cent.; proportion of children falling under each of the six groups, 734-70; preponderance of male defective children over female, 682-4; reference to tables showing comparison, as regards number of defects observed, and number of defective children, between public elementary schools and other institutions for children, 771-9.
Discrimination of defective children, how it should be conducted; two reports required, teacher's and medical inspector's, 780-4, 813, 951-61; method of medical inspection, 785; time required for it, 10 minutes per child, 921-3.
Child material; a medical inspection of a school may, by statistical method, show the prevalence of defects as an index to the quality of the intelligence of the children as a whole, 801; instance of such a report on a Brighton school, 818-9; inquiry into child material also showed that the proportion of reputed dull children in some cases depended, not on the child material, but on the school organisation, 796-800.
Medical inspection of schools should be undertaken by the Education Department; and the State should obtain expert medical advice when required, 707, 805-10.
Medical officers required for school authorities, and such officers should be trained, 913, 986.

Medical certificates, children excused school upon, 910-13.
Defective children frequently unable to obtain admission to schools, 823-9, 878, 901-2, 936-40. Admitted more freely to voluntary than to board schools, 890-1, 917-8. All grades found in ordinary schools, 914-5, 975.
Special classes for defective children: conditions which should be observed as to admission; decision to rest with a lay authority, acting on teacher's and doctor's advice, 822, 834-42, 967-74, 976-8. Probation in ordinary school should precede admission, 843-7. Starting of special classes at Brighton, 818; and at Leicester, 820. Size of classes should not exceed 15, 832. School hours the same as for ordinary children, 919. Special grant of 5*l.* 5*s.* desired for special classes, 853-8.
Teachers of special classes: qualifications required, women trained kindergarten teachers, 833; should also receive special technical training (1) in observing defective children, (2) in treatment of defects by suitable physical exercises, 715-6, 804, 831, 881-9, 920, 979-85, 994.
Sexes, in special classes, may be mixed up to 14, 997.
Nervous children, not otherwise defective, should not necessarily be sent to special classes, 898-905.
Dull children not necessarily to be sent to special classes, 962-6.
Physical exercises: their importance in training feeble-minded children, 705-6, 979. "Signs" may be removed thereby, 729.
School age, 5 to 16 recommended, 708, 895-7; but the age of compulsory attendance difficult to raise, 859-61, 929-32. If School Authority were compelled to provide suitable schools, compulsion of parent would be secondary matter, 862-77.
Industrial training desired after age of 16, 906-9.
Blind and Deaf Act: extension desired to defective children, and especially as regards the compulsion of School Authorities to provide suitable schools, 814-5, 853-77. Cannot frame legal definition of feeble-minded, 928.
Parents, some anxious for special education of their defective children, others careless, 879-83.

Official statistics: sexes should be separately shown, 812.

Method of examination; signs not new, but system consists in co-relation of signs previously known, (Galton) 6016-8, 6039-48; statistics and suggested verification, (Galton) 5958, 15.
